Harvard university launch of Snakes in the Ganga

Rajiv Malhotra starts the conversation with a brief introduction of his prior work and certain concepts that he pioneered, with a special emphasis on the systematic “digestion” of Hindu and Indic thought and the scientific progress made by our civilization.

This has also allowed the West to exclude the political dimension in Hinduism that is exemplified in our Itihasas, thus rendering Hindus incapable of protecting themselves.

He refers to the ongoing “victimhood Olympics” where groups are in a race to claim victimhood because victimhood is so economically advantageous. Once Dalits become declared victims, atrocity literature production will go into overdrive to further build the narrative.

He asks Professor Francis Clooney of the Harvard Divinity School for his perspectives on individual versus collective karma, Hinduism’s answer for social inclusion (svadharma), and the call to dismantle Hinduism for social injustices in Hindu society when there’s no call to dismantle Christianity or Islam for social injustices in these societies. Professor Clooney’s responses to Rajiv about individual responsibility, compassion and the need to take the political middle as well as to a few other questions including the inadequacy of Indian education in teaching Indic social sciences conclude the discussion. Discussion with Michael Parker

In this jampacked session, the speakers discuss a whole range of issues related to Rajiv Malhotra’s latest book Snakes in the Ganga. The role of the “snakes” in spreading Wokeism is explained.

Its rapid spread in India is attributed to its infiltration of the elite, and through them to the institutions (educational, governmental, corporate, etc.). And being enamored with the West, the Indian elite is eager to associate with it. The fact that many Indian billionaires have been roped in to fund the Woke movement speaks volumes.

The WEF’s role is briefly touched upon. Wokeism’s foundation in Marxism breeds hatred between communities ,thus destroying traditions, social structures, family, faiths and all human achievements so far. It also doesn't solve the problem because its attack on meritocracy only serves to lower the standards of excellence. This is a danger particularly in STEM education, because it affects competitiveness of the U.S., India and every other society that accepts it.

Rajiv stresses the importance of global collaboration to bring down Wokeism and points out that it won't be easy because the Woke movement has a head start of 10 years, is globally unified and extremely well networked globally. Video.

Deplatforming Dharmic LGBT

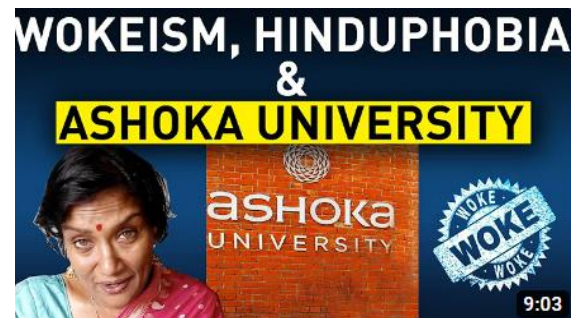

Vijaya Viswanathan explains how the Godrej Culture Labs in India is applying western stereotypes of gender to Indian society, ignoring India's own history, cultural makeup and solutions to these issues.

Its brand ambassador is Anish Gawande, a self-described anti-nationalist, has positioned Godrej Culture Labs as the go-to place for activism combining gender issues with Kashmir separatism. From holding rallies protesting the CAA to writing articles referenced at US government hearings on human rights in Kashmir, speaking against the Indian army and supporting hooliganism in JNU, he lives true to his description.

Therefore, it isn't surprising that Godrej Culture Labs deplatforms LGBTQ people who do not support an anti-Hindu anti-India narrative. It also ends up partnering with groups spurring divisiveness in the country. India Foundation for the Arts (IFA), a leftist organization with broad reach, is an example. Video.

Is Ashoka University breeding wokeism in India?

Western gender studies propagate gender fluidity, rejecting the biological male/female binary. Since their claim is that it is a social construct, they consider peoples' lived experience to be of paramount importance.

Other than the fact that they entertain no rational debate on the issue, there's also the problem of lived experience being tailored by "grooming" exercises. In the west, this is giving rise to an unprecedented level of body-mutilating gender transition surgeries.

The Centre for Studies in Gender and Sexuality (CSGS) at Ashoka University is one of the conduits transferring these ideas to India.
